During the air raid over Paris, Secretary War Baker took refuge in a wine cellar. Now see the prohibitionists rise in their righteous wrath and demand his removal from the Cabinet.

Floods of unprecedented height have isolated Charleston, W. Va., the city in which the government is building its $10,000,000 armor-plate plant. Had the deluge come before the site was selected, perhaps Richmond's invitation would have been more favorably received. In this favored place such catastrophes of nature are unknown.

Joy riding by city employees in city-owned automobiles has received a well-merited jolt at the hands of the Administrative Board. At the present prices of gasoline, rubber tires and other accessories, the taxpayers do not feel that it should be required that they furnish them to those persons who are so fortunate as to have their names attached to the city pay roll. It is one of the little leaks which in the aggregate means the yearly wasting of thousands of dollars of the people's money.

"Rückle to a spade" is the latest win-thewar stogan, and its appeal is being heeded by many thousands of thrift gardeners in Richmond and throughout the State. There may be other thousands whose gardens failed last year, and in the wake of that disappointment These must be put back in the line with spade and hoe. Now is the time to capitalize last year's experience and make every available inch lof ground to blossom. If their efforts were needed last year, they are doubly essential now.

Patriotism comes before political ambition in the heart of former Governor McGovern. of Wisconsin A Heeding its appeal, he has retired from the race for the Republican nomination to the United States Senate and has thrown his support to Representative Lenroot. He has thus solidified the opposition against Thompson, La Follette's protege. and the latter's defeat is practically assured. In making possible the discomfiture of the disloyalists, the former Governor does a distinct service to his nation, and helps to wipe a disgraceful blot from the otherwise fair name-of his State.

subjected to anpatriotic vilification, and has been the object of a little cabal of politicians of both parties, who have openly announced their intention of hounding him from the President's Cabinet. As he sets foot in France, he is received with acclaim and hailed "organizer of victory." It is another case of "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Happily, his detractors and enemies at home have been silenced by the concrete results of his labors, and it may be that his new friends abroad are possessed of the real gift of vision.

New York has refused to do what its Southern States' rights neighbors are doing, evidently without a thought to the principle involved, its Assembly having declined to ratify the national prohibition amendment without a referendum to the people. By its refusal it declares its allegiance to that timehonoged observance of a people's constitutional right to regulate their own affairs, which the South had been expected to uphold, but which was descried in the home of i its friends. The South has bowed the head and bent the knee before its sacerdotal rulers until the prestige hedging about the individual States has been lost, and it remains | high time that the men of Virginia inaugurfor a Northern State to raise the banner once broudly carried below the Mason and form as reflected in speeches made at the formal opening of the primary campaign. They again have dragged out and burnished up for use that venerable old skeleton of oneman government and corporate control, and are raitling its bones right vigorously in a desperate effort to frighten the people away from Their demand for changes in the City Charter which would deprive various and sundry well-paid persons of their connection with the city's pay roll. But the people will refuse to be scared. The old, threadbare, reactionary arguments have been investigated egg trust.

and found wanting in basis of fact. They will serve no more. The voters already have determined in their minds that the city government must be modernized, and what they want they will get at the polls.

Government Insurance Business

WITHIN less than five months the United States government has issued slightly more than $12.000,000,000 in insurance to the soldiers and sailors of the American army and navy. Approximately 1,500,000 policyholders have been enrolled, and the end is not yet. Such figures as these almost take one's breath, and have given more than a shock to the old-line companies, which have been compelled for generations to importune the reluciant man or woman to purchase tuat mancial security which can only be obtained through life insurance.

Fortunately, the government is not in competition with the private insurance corporations. The risks which it has assumed are risks which the insurance companies have rejected from time immemorial. It has been regarded as suicidal for any private insuring institution to incure soldiers or sailors in time of war, and most policy contracts written in time of peace carry clauses which vitiate the obligation if the holder enters the armed forces of the country.

But the government assumes these risks in lieu of a possible pension in case of injury or death, and obviously the policy which provides war-time insurance for the men in the fighting forces of the country is one of the sanest which this or any other government has adopted in this or any other war. The guarantee is given to the man in the ranks that his family is amply provided for, if he be killed, or his future is safeguarded if he be incapacitated for normal labor. All this is arranged at so small a cost to the insured that he can scarcely miss the premium exacted. Moreover, the premiums are taken from the pay of the insured, which relieves him of the bookkeeping involved or the risk of failure to keep a policy in effect.

On the other hand, the government is relieved of the enormous pension outlay which would otherwise tax the country for generations after the war. The Treasury Department has paid out since the War Between the States more money in pensions than the war cost in dollars and cents while it was in progress. More than that, pensions are still being paid, not only to veterans, but to the widows, and not only to widows of the War Between the States, but actually to widows of the Mexican War.

Even so, it is too soon to pronounce the government insurance scheme a complete financial success. This cannot be determined until the war has ended and the accounts are balanced. If the conflict continues for two or three more years and if the casualties are heavy, the payments which will be necessary may create an enormous deficit in the treasury of the War Insurance Bureau, ' Such a deficit would have to be made up by current

Protect the Training Camps

THE Secretary of the Navy has shocked 1 certain cities by an order creating a dry zone five miles in width around eight of the naval training stations, including the Naval Academy in the ancient and honorable city of Anuapolis. By this act he has, in effect, legislated the venerable city bone dry; he has placed a large part of the fashionable city of Newport, R. I., in the same category, and has done as much for Vallejo, Cal., a city within five miles of the Mare Island training station. Five other stations, three of which are on Virginia soil, are included, but the territory adjacent to them already is dry.

There is nothing startling about this policy except the fact that it applies to incorporated towns. Already the War Department, acting under authority of the selective draft law, had created similar zones around the cantonments and other training encampments. But Secretheir arder and working-patriotism lag. tary Baker had placed most of these military posts beyond incorporated cities that might streets just when the most people are around. be wet, and for that reason the army regulations have not compelled any community that legalized liquor to reform itself.

Mr. Daniels has had a different problem to deal with. Most of his training stations were established before the war came or else were established at plants which existed before the war. For that reason a number of them were in immediate proximity to wet cities, notably that at Annapolis and that at Newport. The only means he had of guarding against the sale of liquor to the men engaged in navel training was to outlaw the liquor business in such cities. The country a long time ago found that Mr. Daniels had the courage to deal decisively with the liquor question whenever the occasion should arise.

In the present instance, Mr. Daniels needs no gratuitous justification for his drastic order. He has exhausted all powers of persuasion in an effort to induce the municipal At Home Secretary of War Baker has been authorities at Annapolis, Newport and Vallejo to protect the young men now in his charge against bootleggers. It is unlawful for any person to sell liquor to a soldier or sailor in uniform, but this law has been violated with more or less impunity in each of these wet cities. When Mr. Daniels found that local interests could not be relied upon to enforce this law, he decided to exercise the drastic powers given him by Congress to create dry zones around every training station of the navy. His order has now gone forth, and from this time on the provost guard of the navy will re-enforce police authority when the latter seems incompetent in enforcing the law. Meantime, the three cities affected will go upon a bone-dry basis from a civilian standpoint as well as from a naval standpoint.

Cherse is one of the best foods we have, apciting, very nourising, comparatively cheap, oroughly digestible. People cat altogether too the cheese, chiefly because of foolish prejuces against it.

In the first place there is a notion hat enecse intle cheese, chiefly because of foolish prejudices against it.

In the first place there is a notion hat enecse is "hard to digest." Or there was such a notion in the last physiological era. A generation ago the doctors were still relying upon the etassical observations of Leaument in the case of Alexis St. Martin, a Camadian, who had an artificial opening into the stomach from a wound. Beaumont made records of the varying time that different foods remained in the stomach, and foods which left the stomach quickly, to enter the intestine farther along, he thought were easily digested, whereas foods which remained long in the stomach were difficult to digest. This, of course, was an error. Stomach digestion is only one part of the process, and not the most imhoritant part either. To say that this article is easily digested and that is hard to digest is merely giving reign to imagination. X-ray observation of the process of normal digestion has upon in the stomach digestion has upon in the stomach of the older ideas and brought a new physiological era.

Cheese is highly concentrated food. A little goes a long way toward making a meal. If you eat too much of it you will feel uncomfortable: overeating is generally productive of some discomfort. If you cat little or nothing with the cheese, little or nothing is reft after digestion is competed, and so the bowel has nothing to eliminate and no stimulus to act.

The life in cheese is both batteria and molds. All healthful. Cottage cheese is an ideal dericacy and a pretty satisfying article of food into the bargain.

If you eat cheese late at night it does no harm. I know because I often eat it late. But if you combine with the cheese such unhygienic things as beer, strong coffee, or lobster, then you will have reason to know that your digestion is burdened. I know because I've often been called out of my nice warm bed to minister to idiots of that stripe.

Meatless days and wheatless days ought to increase the damand for all kinds of cheese. There are many varieties o

The Age of Cancer.—Kindly tell me the earliest age at which a man has been known to have cancer. Also please state whether a man aged thirty-two years has cause to be alarmed if his uncle died at fifty from cancer of the nose, and if he himself has had for several months a wartlike bump or growth on the cheek just below the right cheekbone which does not go away.

Answer.—Cancel may occur before the age of thirty. Sarcoma (galloping cancer) is frequent in children and young adults. Epithelioma iskin cancer) is most commonly seen in advanced life, but does not occur before forty. The young man shouldn't waste time worrying at all. And it is of no consequence what his uncles and other relatives died of. He should have that troublesome little sore removed right now, by any good doctor, under local anaesthesia, and if the pathological test shows that it is epitheliomat, then have about six X-ray treatments of t'z wound to prevent possible recurrence. Every family has cancer cases in its history at one time or another. That isn't because cancer is hereditary—but because the disease is hereditary—but because the disease is so very general that it is bound to

In the meantime, Pennsylvania Avenue was packed with people expecting to see the President on his way to the Capitol to make answer in person to the articles of impeachment. Mr. Johnson did not go, however, but was represented by Messrs. Stanberry, Curtis and Nelson, of his counsel. At the opening of the Senate the chaplain prayed that the decision of the court might be approved by the people of the country and by the courts of high heaven. Methodist Delegates at Baltimore Have to Pay Their Own Expenses

BALTIMORE, March 15 .- For the first time in its history, the enter-BALTIMORE, March 15.—For the first time in its history, the enter-tainment of the Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, which meets in the Brondway Church on April 3, will be on the until basis. In all the years of its history the conference entertainment has always been on the free basis, but at the last session in Starr Church, this city, it was thought that on account of the numerical size of the body, it was asking most too much of any of the churches to entertain the upwards of 300 ministers and lay delegates free.

Just what effect the new order of things will have on the conference is at present a matter of much speculation among the ministers and laymen of the church. From some quarters there comes an opinion that the new plan will fall to bring the proper results, and that it will have the effect plan will fall to bring the proper results, and that it will have the effect of keeping some of the clergymen away, for the reason that some of the wesker charges will not be able to pay the expenses of the minister and delegate, as they are compelled to do under the new plan. Others are certain that the paid entertainment plan will rob the annual meeting of most of its social features.

It is believed that many of the ministers will stop at hotels and boarding-houses, and being located far from the conference church, will not take the same interest in the sessions that they have been accustomed to taking under the old plan.

The new plan is in accordance with the resolution adopted at the last session of the conference, and it was won only after a lively debate and after several ballots had been taken. According to President Warner, "the new way is to pay your own way," and that will be a novel experience for the preachers, especially among the older heads, all of whom strongly op-
